2. PROGRAM OVERVIEW

The Education Program offers four minors: Education, Environmental Education, Human Development, and Professional Certification. In addition, we oversee an Independent Major in Human Development.

a) The EDUCATION minor encourages a wide-ranging exploration of educational theories, issues, and practices. It provides preparation for graduate study in early childhood, elementary, or special education, as well as for careers in private school teaching.

b) The ENVIRONMENTAL EDUCATION minor encourages an interdisciplinary approach to theory, research, and practice in the field of environmental education. These activities seek to make explicit the complex intersections between environmental degradation, cultural critique, and processes of education with an emphasis on educational reform, social justice, and environmental activism in the United States. This minor is intended for those students with an interest in pursuing a career in environmental education, outdoor education and/or experiential education.

c) The HUMAN DEVELOPMENT minor encourages an interdisciplinary approach to understanding the development of children, adolescents, and adults. It provides initial preparation for careers in human services and/or social policy in a variety of educational, clinical, and community settings, as well as for graduate study in a number of different fields and disciplines.

d) The PROFESSIONAL CERTIFICATION minor is approved by the Maine State Board of Education. This minor enables students to earn secondary certification in Maine or in one of the 23 other states with which Maine has agreements of reciprocity. It allows students to qualify for public secondary school (grades 7-12) teaching certificates in English Language Arts, Foreign Languages, Mathematics, Life Science, Physical Science, and Social Studies (see requirements listed in Colby Catalogue and/or Program Brochure).

e) The Independent Major in HUMAN DEVELOPMENT is an interdisciplinary major that combines coursework in our program with coursework in Psychology, Sociology, Anthropology, Philosophy, and Biology. A standard template for this major has been approved by the Independent Study Committee, so it is relatively easy for students wishing to pursue this major to do so.

3. PROGRAM ACTIVITIES, 2004-2005

This has been another productive and successful year for our program. We welcomed both Karen Barnhardt and Lyn Brown back from full-year sabbaticals, last year, and we bid farewell to Adam Howard, our faculty fellow last year, as he headed back to Antioch as Associate Professor of Education and Associate Dean of the Faculty.

During the fall semester we offered seven courses. Six of these courses have been taught before, and represent regular and long-standing features of our curriculum: ED 215—Children and Adolescents in Schools and Society (Tappan); ED 231—Teaching for Social Justice (Tappan); ED 332—Women, Girls, and the Cultures of Education (Brown); ED 336—American Education (Barnhardt); ED 431—Curriculum and Methods (Kusiak); and ED 433—Senior Student Teaching Practicum (Kusiak). One course, ED 315—U.S. Environmental Justices Issues, taught by Karen Barnhardt, was a new course. It represents a core requirement of the new Environmental Education minor.

During Jan Plan we offered four courses: ED 116—Designing Children’s Television for Social Justice (Brett Pierce); ED 197—Media Profiling and Education (Brett Pierce); ED 351/355—Practicum in Education (Barnhardt); and ED 437—Senior Student Teaching Practicum (Kusiak). All courses were fully enrolled, including the specialty courses taught by Brett Pierce, and all were quite successful.

During the spring semester we offered six courses. Four of these courses have been taught before, and represent regular and long-standing features of our curriculum: ED 231—Teaching for Social Justice (Tappan); ED 235—Revolutionary Multiculturalism (Barhardt); ED 374—Teaching Students with Special Needs (Kusiak); and ED 493A—Senior Seminar in Education and Human Development (Tappan). One course, 493 B—Senior Seminar in Environmental Education, taught by Karen Barnhardt, was a new course. It represents the culminating experience for students in the Environmental Education minor, and enrolled five students this year. Finally, Mark Tappan taught WG/ED 217—Boys to Men for the second time. This course represents both a contribution to the gender studies component of the Women’s, Gender, and Sexuality Studies program, as well as an elective in the Education Program.

Our program continues to play a major role in the service learning/civic engagement initiative at Colby. Students are responsible for completing service learning projects in a significant number of our courses, including ED 215; WG/ED 217; ED 231, ED 332, ED 374, ED 493A, and ED 493B. In addition, our program continues to support the Colby Cares about Kids Mentoring Program. Mark Tappan serves on the chair of the CCAK Coordinating Committee and participates in training, mentor reflection sessions, and evaluation. Our program also assumed responsibility for overseeing the America Reads/America Counts program for the College this year.

Finally, this was a year of reviews for our program, both individual and collective. Mark Tappan and Lyn Brown prepared dossiers for promotion to Full Professor, the Program prepared a self-study and was reviewed by an Overseers Visiting Committee in October 2004, and the Program prepared a self-study and was reviewed by a Visiting Team from the State Department of Education, for reapproval of the Professional Certification minor, in November 2004. All of these reviews and evaluations were ultimately quite successful, with very helpful suggestions provided, particularly, by the Colby Overseers regarding ways to strengthen the program.

4. DIVERSITY RELATED ACTIVITIES

Because of our program’s explicit commitment to social justice we consider virtually all of our efforts, both in and outside the classroom, to be in support of the College’s ongoing diversity initiative:

The Education Program is guided by John Dewey’s distinction between “education as a function of society,” where the function of education is to prepare the minds of the young to maintain and uphold the basic principles of society, and “society as a function of education,” where the function of education is to remake or reform society, because the principles and directives that govern society, and support the status quo, are by and large unjust. We firmly embrace the latter perspective, and thus our program is explicitly committed to promoting social justice, both in schools and in society at large. Our courses explore the impact of cultural assumptions, societal norms, and institutional policies and practices on both individuals and groups. Students and faculty work together to examine the operation of power as it relates to the construction of knowledge and the preservation of privilege. In so doing, students are encouraged to analyze and critique the intended and unintended oppressions resulting from specific educational and institutional practices by (1) considering the values and politics that pervade educational institutions, as well as the more pragmatic issues of teaching and organizing schools; (2) asking critical questions about how taken-for-granted assumptions and conventions about theory and practice came to be, and who in society benefits from such assumptions; (3) attending to differences in gender, race, social class, sexual orientation, and ability that result in political, social, economic, and educational marginalization and inequality, particularly for children and youth; (4) examining the connections among sexism, racism, classism, and other forms of oppression as they relate to environmental and ecological concerns; and (5) investigating how schooling plays a crucial role in the development of attitudes and behaviors toward “nature” and the environment. Students are also encouraged to move beyond critique and to theorize about the creation and implementation of educational and institutional practices that promote greater social justice and equity in society as a whole. (Education Program Mission Statement, 2004)

Some specific examples of work conducted by program faculty in support of social justice at Colby during the 2004-2005 academic year include:

- Both Karen Kusiak and Mark Tappan continued to serve as Deltech facilitators on campus, offering Valuing Differences and Engaging Differences workshops to faculty and staff.

- Mark Tappan served as member and Chair of the Race and Racism committee, continuing the work of previous Program members on this committee, Lyn Brown and Karen Barnhardt.

- Mark Tappan served as a member of the campus-wide Diversity Oversight Team.

- Both Lyn Brown and Mark Tappan served as members of the Women’s, Gender, and Sexuality Studies Program Faculty.

- Both Karen Barhardt and Mark Tappan served as Faculty Allies.

- Karen Barnhardt continued her very important work in support of ALANA and International Students as an Faculty Resident. This included serving as the Faculty Advisor to SOBHU, and providing informal counsel and support to many students.

- The program continued to provide a home and support for The untold story: The history of activism and social justice at Colby (http://www.colby.edu/education/activism/).

We continue to search for ways to attract more students of color and international students to our program. But we also believe our mission to promote social justice in schools and society at large also includes interrupting privilege and raising the consciousness of members of dominant social identity groups—which we continue to do at every opportunity.

4. STUDENT ADVISING

The core program faculty has been responsible for advising the Education, Environmental Education, Human Development, and Professional Certification minors and the Independent Majors in Human Development that we have had in the program this year. This advising is largely informal and ad hoc. Rather than move to a more systematic procedure, we have decided to maintain the somewhat informal system that has evolved over the past decade or so within the structure of our program. Mark Tappan is primarily responsible for advising the students majoring and minoring in Education and Human Development; Karen Barnhardt is primarily responsible for advising students minoring in Environmental Education; and Karen Kusiak works most closely with students seeking professional certification. This system is not set in stone, however, and students are free to seek advice from any faculty member(s) they choose.

All of the program faculty, in conjunction with Cindy Parker and Cate Ashton in Career Services, do a significant amount of career and graduate school advising—the most common questions concern options for graduate school and ways in which students can obtain elementary and secondary teaching certificates after they graduate from Colby.

5. CLASS OF 2005

The Class of 2004 contained 5 Education minors (all are planning to teach or work full-time); 4 Human Development minors (all are planning to work full-time next year); and 10 Professional Certification minors (all of whom are planning to teach next year)—for a total of 19 graduating minors.

In the Class of 2005 two students graduated with an Independent Major in Human Development. Both of these students are planning to work full time next year.

6. CONCLUDING REMARKS

As we look ahead to 2005-2006, we anticipate that Karen Barnhardt will be on medical leave in the Fall and during Jan Plan, which will necessitate some changes in our teaching schedule and advising responsibilities. These changes should be minor, however, and we don’t anticipate any disruptions in our program. We wish Karen the best, and hope that her leave will help resolve her lingering struggles with her health. Otherwise we will look forward to the opportunity to review and discuss our curriculum, as recommended by our Overseers. Students and faculty in the program will continue work with the Colby Cares About Kids program, America Reads/America Counts, the Service Learning/Civic Engagement initiative, the Goldfarb Center, as well as the College’s ongoing diversity initiative. All in all it promises to be another busy and exciting year.

As always, we appreciate the support, assistance, and encouragement we have received from all members of the Colby community, particularly the Dean of Faculty’s office.
