The Education Program at Colby College invites applications for a one year faculty fellow position (to teach four courses), beginning September 1, 2009. We seek a teacher-scholar (Ph.D./Ed.D, or ABD) to teach courses that offer a critical perspective on education and human development (with a particular focus on children and youth) in contemporary US society. The successful candidate will be familiar with the liberal arts context, possess college-level teaching experience, have expertise in promoting civic engagement and service learning, and be committed to working with public schools. Colby faculty are also expected to pursue a vigorous and sustained program of research and publication.

Colby is a private, highly selective liberal arts college with 1800 students, recognized for excellence in undergraduate education and for close student-faculty interaction. The Education Program consists of four faculty members; it is committed to promoting social justice in schools and society at large; and it offers Maine State Certification at the secondary level as well as academic programs in Education, Environmental Education, and Human Development. More information about the program can be found at www.colby.edu/academics_cs/acaddept/education/

Review of applications will begin February 1, 2009 and continue until the position is filled.

To apply please send letter of application, curriculum vitae, statements of teaching and research interests, copies of publications or in-press manuscripts, names and contact information for at least three references, and other relevant materials (e.g., evidence of teaching effectiveness, course syllabi) to:
